

Submit an Incident Report

All MIT community members are encouraged to report any concern about discrimination, discriminatory harassment, and bias.

Please use the buttons below to report your concern to IDHR online, including to report anonymously.

I have a concern about a student's conduct.

Submit Report

I have a concern about a faculty or staff's conduct.

Submit Report

I have a general climate concern or I don't know the identity or affiliation of the person whose behavior is concerning me.

Submit Report

To learn more about what happens when you submit an incident report, please visit our Reporting Options page.

Reporting just means letting IDHR know something has occurred. It does not automatically trigger a formal investigation process. If what you share raises a concern about community safety, IDHR may assess further, but you as an impacted person never have to participate in that process if you do not want to.

QUICK EXIT

At retaliation or identifying yourself, you can use an anonymous email your contact information when filling out a reporting form. Without contact follow up is limited. If you're not sure you are ready to fill out a reporting form, you can also connect with confidential resources who will not inform anyone of what you share without your permission.

If you share some form of contact information, IDHR staff will reach out via email to see if you'd like to set up a time to talk about available resources, supportive measures, and resolution pathways.

COVID-19 Amnesty Policy:

MIT recognizes that there may be circumstances in which the potential for disciplinary action for violations of Covid-19 Student Life policies could act as a barrier to students who want to seek critical assistance for themselves or others and/or report an incident involving a serious violation of Institute policy. Learn more about our amnesty policies for Graduate Students and Undergraduate Students.
