

Which JHU administrator is reading your Facebook Profile?

JHU wants to make sure you don't say anything disrespectful—and if you do, you might be punished.

Just ask Justin Park, who was suspended, sentenced to 300 hours of community service, assigned 12 books to read and write reflection papers on, and required to attend a workshop on diversity and race relations—all because he posted a Halloween party invitation on Facebook that the administration deemed offensive.

Under the university's policy prohibiting all rude and disrespectful behavior, you could be next.
